Elke Johanna de Buhr, PhD, is an Adjunct Assistant Professor at the Payson Center for International Development at Tulane University in New Orleans. Her research focuses on the rights and protection of children, and the health and wellbeing of people of all ages. She is currently the monitoring/data collection specialist on the Tulane University team that oversees the implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol and the efforts undertaken by the international cocoa/chocolate industry to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the cocoa sector in West Africa for the US Congress. Earlier research activities include the study of orphans and vulnerable children in the Democratic Republic of Congo, research of street children in Eastern Europe and the Middle East, HIV/AIDS monitoring and data analysis in Rwanda, data management & capacity building in the health sector in Ethiopia, the evaluation of the international response to the 2004 Indian Ocean tsunami in South-East Asia, and work on the Nepal Human Development Report 2001. Elke de Buhr has worked as a consultant on projects financed by CDC, UN-OCHA, UNAIDS and World Vision, among others. She has a PhD from Tulane University, a MS in International Development from Tulane University, and a Diploma in Political Science from Free University of Berlin, Germany.
